Not illustrated. 1921 Excerpt: . . . and a modified set of teeth known as canine teeth, which are used for killing and tearing their prey. At this point it may be of particular interest to call attention to the fact that in earlier years, such as, for example, in the STONE AGE and the BRONZE AGE, MAN had a greater need for this same type of teeth for fighting purposes. As time went on, this variety of teeth known as canine teeth, which he possessed in conjunction with other varieties, has degenerated compared to its previously very marked development. So we find the IRON AGE, as well as the later periods of human development, in which wonderfully constructed cutting and fighting implements were used considerably (to take the place of his canine teeth), that these teeth were greatly reduced in their general development. The sixth class, the RODENTS, include squirrels, rats, beavers, etc. These animals possess well-developed incisor teeth, which are chisel-shaped and are used for gnawing purposes. The seventh class, the INSECTIVORIA, includes such insecteating animals as the shrew. The eighth class, the BATS, include animals which have welldeveloped wings, but do not grow feathers. The ninth class, the PRIMATES, is the last and most highly developed class of all living animals. THE PRIMATES Some of the distinguishing features of the PRIMATES are: Prehensile limbs, each of which terminate in five digits with a flat nail to each digit. One of the digits of the fore-limb is called the thumb, and...
