CHAPTER II CENTRAL PROVINCES--1866-1868 Having with some difficulty obtained a transfer to Field Artillery, I found myself posted to the 14th brigade (May 1866) in India, and was ordered to join the 4th at Kamptee forthwith. Whilst the army list showed this station to be in the Madras Presidency, by the map it appeared to be very much nearer Bombay, and the Staff at Gib. candidly avowed their ignorance of the correct destination. Eventually, on 1st June, I sailed for Bombay by the P. and O. Massilia, a 10-knot paddle steamer of 1640 tons and 400 h. p. , considered rather a good ship in those days. Though pokey and stuffy in comparison with the boats of modern times, things were done far more liberally then than in these days of competition, and if fares were high --first class, Southampton to Bombay, being about...
